Family dollar hours memorial day

When I was a burr-headed kid, our family went through a tough financial time. Most families have a moment of financial trouble at some point. A job layoff can take your breath away. A disease can make you completely bankrupt. The children in the house don't know exactly what's going on, but there's more stress in the air. They are told: Times are tough, so we can't go on vacation this year, or we have to move, or Christmas is going to be skinny, or the boat has to be sold. My parents were in real estate and they were building houses. The economy went sideways and left them in a mess. They worked hard, but it didn't matter. Outside forces have brought trouble to our home. We've never run out of food, shelter, or anything else, but the air has changed in our house. All I knew was that money would solve the problem, so I swore I'd one day be a millionaire. I doubt you knew what that meant, but in my little head, I thought that meant money would never be a problem. When I went to college, I was still broke, but this dream of becoming a millionaire was pulsing inside me. I'm a spender by nature. I've always enjoyed spending money. Of course, when I was young and immature, this idea of spending for fun led to the trap of thinking that if I had enough things, I'd be happy. The high I got buying things was and is real. I'm the guy who thinks they check your receipt at Costco or Sam's Club at the door to prove that you actually spent the $200 needed, like it was a law or something. I never would have admitted it out loud, but there was this stupid idea in the back of my head that if I had enough things, I'd be happy and safe, or if I had the right things, people would be impressed, yes, I know, Shallow Hal, right? With that driving force, I went about the business of earning piles of money so I could spend piles of money. But a funny thing happened on the way to the ball, the Material became... Unsatisfactory. There was never a conclusion or peace after a purchase, still the need to buy something else. No matter how many cars I bought, or fancy dinners I ate, or cool places I traveled to, there was always something still missing. Things don't do that. I also knew God during this time that brought peace and conclusion. I realized I was dumping things in a spiritual hole, and stuff wasn't designed to fill that hole. No matter how many cars I bought, or fancy dinners I ate, or cool places I traveled to, there was always something still missing. Things don't do that. If you eat enough lobster, eventually tastes like soap. So when I was 26, I was a millionaire making $250,000 a year... but if you eat enough lobster it tastes like soap. Yes, I became a millionaire and bored with it. I figured it out. Generosity. That was and it's a lot of fun! It's easy for most spenders to become donors. A new goal popped into my head: one day, with God's help, I want to donate a million dollars in one day. All right that, I failed and lost everything. Well, there gone that goal. That was 30 years ago. Over the next few decades, we slowly began to build wealth... while always donating. We had discovered much more joy in giving than in Things. I'm fine if you want some stuff - get it a bit. I have some cool stuff, but when you look for joy in Things, it will always disappoint you. The more things you own, the more life-aforeas you have to know. Dar never disappoints. Generosity is always fun. God has allowed us to give a lot of money in the last 30 years. And a nice thing happened before Christmas this year. We brought together our 910 team members, our coffee team (an outside vendor), our pastor and his wife, and people from the local children's home (parents of the house and social workers who serve orphans, adoptive children, and other children at risk). Seventeen buses left in front of our offices to take all these people to the mall for a $1,000 shopping spree. We gave each of them $1, 000 in cash. In addition, we gave extra money to the children in the children's home and the people who give their lives for the children. When we arrived at the mall, we held a drawing and gave them tons of other items, including a $5,000 gift card and a car. That's what I'm saying. It was God. He allowed me to donate a million dollars of his money in one day. He loves that dumb-headed kid turned donor so much he allowed me that privilege. If you eat enough lobster it tastes like soap, but when you eat at the table of generosity, you leave the table having tasted the best there is and totally satisfied. Dream the right dreams, then dream them. Getty Images Memorial Day always falls on the last Monday in May, but as the date changes each year, it's easy for the three-day weekend to catch us. First, the annual holiday honors the fallen soldiers of our country, and also functions as the unofficial start of summer and warmer weather. That's right — weekend barbecues, grilled foods and easy country music to set the mood are all ahead once the extended holiday weekend rolls in. And with an extra day off from work, you have plenty of time to relax with your family and friends this Memorial Day weekend. There is no shortage of festive activities to honor the holiday's original roots, such as listening to patriotic music or personally thanking veterans at a local parade. And as Memorial Day usually boasts high temperatures and (hopefully) sunny skies, many people are also eager to go out and soak up the long-awaited pleasant weather. Maybe your family is gaining advantage in your summer bucket list and has a quick camping trip or lake escape planned. Or maybe celebrate with a barbecue in the backyard at home, surrounded by your nearest and dearest, sit more in your alley — with a fun pool of stock tanks to keep younger guests entertained. No matter what you're doing on Memorial Day, one thing is for sure: we're all imperfect people, and imperfect people have an unfortunate tendency to forget things. You may panic and miss an extra box of hamburger buns, or just want to pick up some last minute holiday decorations because your balcony looks very monotonous. Maybe you're even making a Memorial Day care package for soldiers abroad with your little ones and ran out of supplies or tape. But don't worry about it. These things happen, and fortunately, Walmart is here to be your economic savings grace on May 27. Incorporating the last half of your mantra Save money, live best to the max, the superstore will remain open nationwide under normal business hours throughout the day. Times vary by location, so if you're traveling, check the nearest online store using walmart's store locator. Whether you need to do another quick task on Memorial Day, or find out that your neighbor's barbecue has been canceled due to the weather, Walmart isn't alone in keeping its doors open during the national holiday. A handful of restaurants and shops are also accessible on Memorial Day, including Target and Walgreens, as well as Bob Evans and Texas Roadhouse. Now go enjoy a stress-free holiday!
